Our Mission: Bringing Caregiving into the 21st Century

In 2013, six passionate Harvard Business School MBA students developed Carewrite, a sophisticated, yet easy-to-use mobile tool to bring coordinated care for loved ones with cancer or a chronic disease into the 21st century. Millions of family members and friends are ill equipped to manage the task of caregiving and the most common tool available to them today is the notebook. With our goal to meaningfully improve the quality of patient care, caregivers can use Carewrite to a) track and sign-up for patient appointments, b) capture and share digital notes, c) manage medications, and d) store doctors’ contact information. We welcome you to learn more about Carewrite by watching our video and following us on Twitter @carewrite and Facebook.

Update

On May 14th, 2013, the Carewrite team won the Harvard Business School Start-up Competition, in which 150 teams comprised of 900 students competed.

From Left to Right: Linda Wang, Caitlin Cohen, Luke Marker, Mike Czapar, Radha Patel, Eva Luo