The bazaars of Mumbai. The ports of Mozambique. The trading floors of Shanghai. The subways of New York City. HBS brings together innovative minds that represent a wide range of backgrounds, interests, and experiences. Minds that learn from each other. Teach each other. Question how the world works, and how they can make it better.

“THE WORLD IS CHANGING, AND BUSINESS NEEDS TO ADAPT. THAT IS A GOOD THING FOR US.” FARAI SHONHWA, MBA 2010
The MBA Program at HBS educates leaders who make a difference in the world—a world that doesn’t always follow the rules of a business school textbook. Here, you and your colleagues will be immersed in real-life business problems. You’ll learn to assess, analyze, and make decisions amidst missing data, complex politics, moral hazards, and fiscal pressure. After all, reality is the best teaching tool there is.

“No matter how rich your experiences have been, there’s always someone in the classroom who can add insights.” Payam Shodjai, MBA 2009
Put yourself in the shoes of a CEO about to make a decision that not only may affect the future of the company, but also its employees, customers, the industry at large—even modern culture. That’s exactly what the case method will train you to do. To assume the role of decision-maker. To collaborate with your classmates and teachers on global business issues crossing disciplines, industries, and companies. To have courage to act in a world of uncertainty.
My favorite classes are those where the debate is still raging 20 minutes after the class, and we can't stop it. — Professor David Garvin

Students engage in spirited discussion surrounding a global music conglomerate.
More than 80 percent of cases sold throughout the world are written by HBS faculty, who developed approximately 275 cases last year.

“YOU’RE CHALLENGED TO ADVOCATE IN FRONT OF TALENTED PEOPLE WITH POSITIONS OF RESPONSIBILITY.” CARTER ROMANSKY, MBA 2009
